One 9/11 Tally: $3.3 Trillion

By SHAN CARTER and AMANDA COX Published: September 8, 2011

Al Qaeda spent roughly half a million dollars to destroy the World Trade Center and cripple the Pentagon. What has been the cost to the United States? In a survey of estimates by The New York Times, the answer is $3.3 trillion, or about $7 million for every dollar Al Qaeda spent planning and executing the attacks. While not all of the costs have been borne by the government — and some are still to come — this total equals one-fifth of the current national debt. All figures are shown in today's dollars.

How $3.3 Trillion Is Spent

Experts differ on some of these numbers, as well as what should be included in a tally. Here, no attempt has been made to account for some of the imponderables: for example, are oil prices higher because of the Iraq war? But it is clear that it was the nation's response, rather than the damage from the attacks, that

THE CURIOUS CASE OF BENJAMIN BUTTON

PAUL BLART: MALL COP

LAST CHANCE HARVEY

MAN ON WIRE

MAD MEN: SEASON 1: DISC 1

Where Movies Were Popular

While many of the region's most popular titles were well-liked everywhere, others had pockets of strong support - and pockets of little interest. In many cases, a rental most popular in one ZIP code was not among the top 50 titles of a neighboring one. Some patterns of support:

The ZIP codes are shaded according to each movie's rank.

No. 50

Milk (R. 2008) Gus Van Sant's Oscar-winning biopic was one of the 10 most rented movies for more than half of the region but mostly absent from the South Bronx.

Paul Blart: Mall Cop (PG-13, 2009) Hugely popular outside Manhattan and western Brooklyn, this comedy was in the top 25 across Staten Island.

Ranked No. 1

Last Chance Harvey

Aside from a handful of neighborhoods on the Upper West Side and Upper East Side, most people renting this romantic comedy starring Dustin Hoffman were outside New York City.

(PG-13, 2008)

Tyler Perry's the Family That Preys (PG-13, 2008)

Only one in six ZIP codes had this in their top 50, but it ranked No. 1 in some places, including Jamaica, Queens; East Orange, N.J.; and the Brownsville and East Flatbush neighborhoods in Brooklyn.

Man on Wire

(Documentary, 2008) This movie about Philippe Petit's illegal tightrope walk between the World Trade Center towers had strong support in Lower Manhattan and Brooklyn. It was the region's second most popular documentary, behind Bill Maher's "Reliquious."

Vicky Cristina Barcelona (PG-13, 2008) This Woody Allen-directed drama was popular everywhere in Manhattan and in Westchester, but not in the top 50 for most of the South Bronx and Brooklyn.

Funnyman Kevin James ("King of Queens") stars as Paul Blart, an overzealous security guard who finds himself in way over his head when he attempts to thwart a criminal masternind's (Keir O'Donneil) plot to rob an entire shopping mail. Bobby Cannavale, Jayma Mays and Shirley Knight also star in this family-friendly laffer from director Steve Carr, which shares more than a few similarities with the much raunchier Observe and Report.

"The Curious Case of Benjamin Button," which occupies around 25 pages in the collected works of F. Scott Fitzgerald, is a slender piece of whimsy, a charming fantasy about a man who ages in reverse, descending through the years from newborn senescence to terminal infancy. As Fitzgerald unravels it, Benjamin's story serves as the pretext for some amusing, fairly superficial observations about child rearing, undergraduate behavior and courtship in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

uneven shoulder to shoulder and hitting their professional marks note for note. Dustin Hoffman and Emma Thompson don't make a lot of sense as a screen couple. But there's something irresistible about watching two people fall in love, even in contrived. sniffle- and sometimes gaginducing films like "Last Chance Harvey," which means that when he looks at her and she looks at him, there's a good chance that they won't be the only ones in the theater falling for all the hokey lines and shy glances.

There were seven deadly sins practiced at the dawn of the 1960s: smoking, drinking, adultery, sexism, homophobia, anti-Semitism and racism. The magic of "Mad Men" is that it softly spoofs those cruel, antiquated mores without draining away the romance of that era: the amber-lit bars and indigo nightclubs, soaring skyscrapers, and the brash confidence that comes with winning a war and owning the world.

The Vote by County

New Voters, New Power Bases Mr. Obama's campaign them of change created a groundswell of support in areas of the coun-try hurt by the weakened economy. Rising unemployme and housing foreclosures in Rust Belt states, as well as Florida Belt states, as well as Florida and Nevada, may have led voters to support Mr. Obama. A powerful get-out-the-vote effort paid off for the Obama campaign in certain crucial states, like Florida, Colorado and Nevada. The number of people who voted in Florida rose by 9.7 percent from 2004. Many of those voters went to the polls for the first time — and those voters chose Mr. Obama nearly 70 percent of the time. Voter figures were also high in states won by Mr. McCain, like South Carolina, Georgia and Alabama. Turnout may have been a defining factor in Indiana, a battleground state that had 5.3 percent more voters than in 2004. It awarded a narrow victory, and its 11 electoral vote to Mr. Obama.

Even strongly Republican states like Idaho and Utah took large steps toward the Democratic side. John McCain won Salt Lake County. Utah, but by just 2,000 votes President Bush had carried it by 80,000 votes.

Barack Obama was familiar to voters in North Dakota and Montana after the primaries. He held 11 events in Montana and had a large field operation from the primary that was retained for the general election.

Big cities moved in large numbers to Mr. Obama, providing a sharp contrast here between urban and rural voters. Mr. Obama won Dallas County, a place that Mr. Bush won in 2004 by 125,000 votes.

Hispanics in the southern tip of Texas, who had shown affinity for Mr. Bush in past elections, shifted to the Democratic side. Mr. Obama aained votes from Hispanics who favored Hillary Rodham Clinton in the primaries.

Much of the state shifted away from Republicans, but the move was most noticeable in rural counties that had kept the state reliably red in previous elections

Rural white counties from Kentucky to Texas took a different tack from the rest of the country, moving strongly toward Mr. McCain. Turnout in 90-percent-white counties in Tennessee and Arkansas was barely changed from 2004.

Black voters flooded to the polls in rural counties from Virginia to Mississippi. In Alabama, a safely Republican redoubt, turnout in majority-black counties was up 15 percent.

Emerges, in Identity Crisis

By SAM TANENHAUS

One by one, prized Republican strongholds fell Tuesday night and yesterday. Ohio and Indiana, Florida and Virginia, Colorado and Nevada — all succumbed to Senator Barack Obama. And for conservatives it was as disorienting a day as any in the history of the movement that has been a dominant force in shaping modern American politics

One thing was clear: the Republican Party was no longer the party of George W. Bush. But exactly whose party was it, and whose should it become? Senator John McCain never guite succeeded in presenting a coherent alternative version. Can someone else do better?

The answers that have emerged so far reflect the party's current confusion. A coalition once notable for its disciplined unity is now threatened by sectarian rifts that could widen significantly in the weeks ahead. Already, neoconservative defense hawks are pitted against isolationists, libertarian antitax brigades resist the values-driven politics of social conservatives, and the party's intellectuals operate at a growing remove from the base.

Consider the case of Gov. Sarah Palin of Alaska. To some conservatives - including several scheduled to attend a brainstorming meeting in Virginia on Thursday — Ms. Palin represents the party's fresh-faced future. She personifies the values of small-town evangelicals, and her Western style lends piquancy to her populist mockery of Beltway elites and what she has called "the permanent political establishment."

And vet that establishment includes Republicans like Colin Powell, Mr. Bush's former secretary of state, and Kenneth M. Duberstein, Ronald Reagan's final White House chief of staff. both of whom voiced their dismay at Ms. Palin's presence on the ticket and declared their support for Mr. Obama shortly before Election Day.

Meanwhile, party operatives, crunching the unfriendly numbers, are rethinking the red state versus blue state election model mastered by tacticians like Karl Rove. Representative John A.

Boehner of Ohio, the House Republican leader, wants the party to redirect its energies toward voters in the populous states of the Northeast and the Great Lakes region. James Greer, the Republican chairman of Florida, believes the party must adjust to changing demographics. "The party needs to focus on Hispanic voters and African-American voters," Mr. Greer told The New York Times. "It is the future of the Republican Party.'

But the hunt for votes is only part of the problem. There is, more fundamentally, the question of what the two parties have to say and how they say it. Longstanding ideological debates, in particular, seem increasingly irrelevant and out of date.

It may well be that some of Mr. Obama's positions are to the left of the nation's at large - as Mr. McCain and others asserted time and again. But it may also be that most Americans do not much care. What seems to have impressed them is Mr. Obama's attunement to the problems afflicting the country and the hope he offered that they might be solved.

If so, then Republicans may have to jettison some of the most familiar items Continued on Page P9

THE PRESIDENT-ELECT

The Clintons' Shadow

Barack Obama argued that victory for his opponent would be akin to a third term for George W. Bush. Now he faces the challenge of building an administration that does not look like a third term for Bill Clinton. That is generating concern among Obama aides who labored for two years to turn an underdog into a president — in part by beating Hillary Rodham Clinton — only to watch him turn to the Clinton crowd when it comes time to stock a government. A Note of Caution

Mr. Obama has begun an effort to tamp down what his aides fear are unusually high expectations among his supporters, and will remind Americans regularly throughout the transition that the nation's challenges are substantial and will take time to address. PAGE 4

THE TRANSITION

Team-Building, Gingerly

President-elect Obama, now recruiting for his administration, is trying to fulfill campaign promises of sweeping ethics restrictions. But those rules could end up deterring some potential appointees. In a city where policy experts typically work for private interests between stints in public service and often have spouses or family members who are lobbyists, such measures could hamper the new administration, scholars and ethics experts say. A Nice Blue Souvenir? NYT's Big Election Map Doesn't Show Actual Results

The Times published a big blue map on the front page of its special election section -- but it's not a map of the 2008 results. It just shows the relative shift toward the Democrat, not that the Democrat actually won those counties.

There's no disputing that Obama won on Tuesday, but the big blue map published by New York Times seems like a way to overstate the magnitude of the Democratic victory -- maybe just to give liberals a nice blue souvenir to hang in their office cubicles, or maybe a subliminal way of pushing the idea of a huge mandate for liberal government.

Districts Across the Country Shift to the Right

In a sign of discontent with the party in power, 9 of every 10 House districts voted more Republican than they did in 2008.

While Republicans increased their share of the vote in California 8, Nancy Pelosi's lead still increased in the absence of a strong third-party candidate.

Arizona 5 shifted right about 20 points — enough to switch the seat to Republicans. David Schweikert defeated the Democrat he lost to in 2008

The shift in Wisconsin 7 was about average for an open race. Here, Sean P. Duffy, a Republican district attorney, won by 8 percentage points.

One of the largest shifts was in Illinois 17, where Republican Bobby Schilling, a pizza business owner, beat Phil Hare, a two-term Democratic incumbent.

Only a few districts voted more Democratic. In Delaware, the shift helped John Carney defeat Glen Urquhart for the seat held by Michael N. Castle since 1993.

Renee Ellmers delivered one of the Republican Party's narrowest gains in North Carolina 2, a district that Democrats won by 36 percentage points in 2008.

With President George W. Bush up for his second term in a close race against John Kerry, most districts voted more Democratic.

Discontent with President Bush, the war in Iraq and the handling of Hurricane Katrina helped the Democrats take control of the House and Senate.

A majority of districts, riding the wave of Barack Obama's campaign, moved toward the Democrats, but the shift was less widespread than in 2006.

Emotional or Cerebral: Republicans Face a Choice in How to Oppose

The day after the election always dawns sunny and full of hope in Washington. From Representative John A. Boehner on down, Republicans talked on Wednesday about how open they were to working with the president (except, perhaps, for repealing that whole health care thing). Rand Paul, the next senator from Kentucky, said on MSNBC TIMES that his family was hoping to meet the Obama girls. You could almost see the two dads stretched out in front of the TV, sharing a laugh at "Phineas and Ferb.'

Reality will intrude soon enough, and Republicans will have to decide what kind of opposition they intend to be. One could argue that the most fundamental choice facing the new Republican House majority, in particular, is whether to stand on cultural or intellectual dissent — or, put another way, whether they want to cast themselves principally as the party of Sarah Palin or the party of Paul Ryan.

The election only enhanced the stature of Ms. Palin, who bucked her party's leadership by endorsing several outsider candidates - among them Mr. Paul and Nikki Haley, the governor-elect of South Carolina - who won this week. A powerful force in the party, Ms. Palin represents an aggrieved, anti-elitist strain of conservatism that goes back to Richard M. Nixon's Silent Majority. It is a rural conservative impulse, rooted most firmly in the South and West, that equates liberal government with tyranny and anti-Americanism.

In the kind of opposition Ms. Palin represents, issues aren't always meant to be addressed through governance, but rather to be deployed as blunt instruments in pursuit of more electoral gains. For the new Republican-led House, that would mean more questions about the president's birth certificate, more subpoenas flowing down Pennsylvania Avenue, more votes on abortion and flag burning and all of that.

And it might mean passing a bill on gun rights or school prayer that excites the base, knowing full well that the Democratic-controlled Senate will simply let it die anyway.

Mr. Ryan, of Wisconsin, on the other hand, is the author of a radically austere plan to scale back federal spending, and he is about to become chairman of the House Budget Committee. Mr. Ryan, a Washington insider, is heir to the side of the conservative movement that grew out of think tanks and policy journals in the 1960s and '70s.

To Mr. Ryan's way of thinking, liberals in government aren't cultural imperialists; in fact, he gets along with them just fine. Rather, Mr. Ryan sees the president and his allies as hopelessly misguided, reliant on unsustainable government spending rather than the market. Mr. Ryan's kind of opposition would offer up an alternative, polarizing agenda, forcing President Obama and his allies to defend their philosophy and their intransigence.

In a sense, Ms. Palin and Mr. Ryan represent opposite sides of the Republican conundrum at the moment. Ms. Palin is an outsider with a serious following in the party's grass roots, but she has not shown that she has a plan to actually govern. Mr. Ryan is a powerful Washington figure with an office full of detailed flip charts, but he has little, if any, following out among the faithful.

Mr. Boehner or his newly empowered lieutenants probably see some peril in pursuing either kind of opposition. Translating all of this Tea Party rhetoric about spending and deficits into some kind of alternative governing plan is a sobering undertaking — so much so that most Republican candidates this year refused to endorse Mr. Ryan's version, which would partly privatize Social Security and Medicare.

But to adopt a less substantive, more cultural kind of opposition, while it might satisfy a lot of Tea Party types would be to court another voter revolt in 2012 or 2016. After all, if exit polls and conversations with individual voters

In Florida's New Senator, Some Conservatives See Rise of the 'Great Right Hope'

By DAMIEN CAVE

CORAL GABLES, Fla. - For many Tea Party conservatives, Hispanics, and young Americans frustrated with the national debt that baby boomers have saddled on their future, Marco Rubio's victory in the Florida Senate race gave them an extra reason to celebrate.

The right finally had an action hero: young, dynamic, serious about policy, with a biography ready-made for inspiration.

"He's our Cuban Barack Obama," said Alex Lacayo, 36, a campaign volunteer at the Rubio victory party on Tuesday night who could not stop giving hugs to strangers. "He gives us hope."

The comparison has been made before, but by coming from behind to handily defeat Gov. Charlie Crist as well as Representative Kendrick B. Meek, Mr. Rubio, 39, has completed his entrance onto the national stage. With turbocharged help from the Tea Party, he has gone from a no-name former state lawmaker to what the conservative press calls the "great right hope."

And yet his path to the Senate has not been in a straight line, and neither, friends and supporters say, is his path forward. Mr. Rubio is not a libertarian like Rand Paul, the newly elected senator from Kentucky, and his policy expertise was honed by former Gov. Jeb Bush, not Sarah Palin.

His positions have shifted on issues like immigration, and after a campaign waged with ideological fervor and sprinkled with anti-Obama speeches, he now seems eager to play the pragmatist.

Who is Marco Rubio? At a news conference on Wednesday, at least, he was a young senator-elect who only mentioned President Obama once, in the context of finding a way to work with him, not against him. But he also was an insurgent who said voters were demanding change.

'You better not go up there and become like everybody else," Mr. Rubio said, describing the message he had heard.

The Republican establishment has been quick to claim Mr. Rubio as its own.

During the primary, before his momentum led Mr. Crist to leave the Republican fold to run as an independent, Mr. Rubio attracted support from a who's who of the party. Former Vice President Dick Cheney endorsed him. Mitt Romney, Rudolph W. Giuliani and Ms. Palin all campaigned with him. At times, it was as if he was the one being sought, not the other way around.

Those who have known Mr. Rubio for years said they had been surprised at how quickly his fortunes had changed. Rebeca Sosa, a member of the Miami-Dade County Board of Commissioners who has known Mr. Rubio since he entered politics, said voters in his own neighborhood failed to recognize him when he knocked on doors at the beginning of his Senate campaign.

It was a somewhat less humiliating experience than when he joined the State Legislature in 2000 and was mistaken for an aide three years later be-

When the first polls close in Indiana and Kentucky, three races could offer early signs of Republican support. In Indiana, Baron P. Hill, who lost re-election in 2004, but won in the Democratic sweep of 2006 and again in 2008, is an important contest. If Mr. Hill falls short to Todd Young, a Republican, it could be a long night for Democrats. But if he wins, the victory could be a good omen for the Democratic Party. Joe Donnelly, Democrat of Indiana, is another bellwether. A loss would be a bad sign for Democrats, while a victory over Jackie Walorski could be a sign the Republican wave has its limits. But the best indicator could come in Kentucky in the race of Ben Chandler, a Democrat who won easily in 2006 and 2008, but faces a difficult test this year.

As Clinton Solidifies Edge, G.O.P. Field Is Wide Open

In Democratic Race, Rivals Are Turning More Aggressive

By ADAM NAGOURNEY and JEFF ZELENY

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22 — Senator Hillary Rodham Clinton has consolidated her early lead in the Democratic presidential contest, showing steady strength as the candidates head toward the first voting early next year.

She has been challenged for fund-raising supremacy and news media attention by Senator Barack Obama of Illinois. Former Senator John Edwards of North Carolina beat her to the punch in introducing big policy proposals. But nothing that her main rivals have done has so far has derailed Mrs. Clinton, leading them to begin rolling out aggressive new strategies aimed primarily at her, including courting black voters in South Carolina and stepping up attacks.

She has maintained solid leads in most national polls. And while polls in early voting states like Iowa and New Hampshire are of limited value in predicting the outcome, they too show her more than holding her own entering the period in which primary voters begin to make up their minds.

"I think they've run a great campaign," David Axelrod, Mr. Obama's senior adviser, said of Mrs. Clinton, of New York. "She's been a very disciplined candidate. They've been deft in trying to get ahead of this tidal wave of people out there who really want change. They are doing the best they can with it."

But Mr. Axelrod, pointing to what he saw as Mrs. Clinton's foremost vulnerability, said:

Republican Hopefuls Take Varying Paths in a Fluid Race

By MICHAEL COOPER and MICHAEL LUO

The race for the Republican presidential nomination remains remarkably fluid, with important constituencies like evangelical voters having yet to settle on a candidate, and the late entrance of former Senator Fred D. Thompson generating little excitement.

With the state of play so unsettled and Republicans still grappling with the political implications of the Iraq war and President Bush's weakness, the leading contenders are plotting out strikingly different road maps to the nomination.

Mitt Romney's senior advisers met recently in Boston to present him with a blueprint for the next four months centered on what some call a kindling strategy the belief that early victories in places like Iowa, Michigan and New Hampshire will make him impossible to stop by Feb. 5, when a crush of other states vote at once. He has spent heavily on advertising and building field operations in the early states, gambling that he will have enough money to hold off later onslaughts by competitors who have so far spent more sparingly.

The Thompson campaign, by contrast, starts from the premise that the unsettled early primary season and the lack of a clear front-runner have created a chaotic race that they can capitalize on, despite a bumpy start that left some Republicans wondering if Mr. Thompson was fully pre-pared and engaged. Habana Health Care Center, a 150-bed nursing home in Tampa, Fla., was struggling when a group of large private investment firms purchased it and 48 other nursing homes in 2002.

The facility's managers quickly cut costs. Within months, the number of clinical registered nurses at the home was half what it had been a year earlier, records collected by the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services indicate. Budgets for nursing supplies, resident activities and other services also fell, according to Florida's Agency for Health Care Administration.

The investors and operators were soon earning millions of dollars a year from their 49 homes.

Residents fared less well. Over three years, 15 at Habana died from what their families contend was negligent care in lawsuits filed in state court. Regulators repeatedly warned the home that staff levels were below mandatory minimums. When regulators visited, they found malfunctioning fire doors, unhygienic kitchens and a resident using a leg brace that was broken.

"They've created a hellhole," said Vivian Hewitt, who sued Habana in 2004 when her mother died after a large bedsore be-

Habana is one of thousands of nursing homes across the nation that large Wall Street investment companies have bought or agreed to acquire in recent years.

Those investors include prominent private equity firms like Warburg Pincus and the Carlyle Group, better known for buying companies like Dunkin' Donuts.

As such investors have acquired nursing homes, they have often reduced costs, increased profits and quickly resold facilities for significant gains.

But by many regulatory benchmarks, residents at those nursing homes are worse off, on average, than they were under previous owners, according to an analysis by The New York Times of data collected by government agen-

Evacuees fled Hurricane Katrina and the floods that followed in caravans of cars and fleets of buses, on helicopters and chartered planes, by boat and, a few, on foot. A month after the storm, a map

Of 1,356,704 applications, 86 percent came from Louisiana, Mississippi, Texas and Alabama. But 35,539 families were more than 1,000 miles from the Gulf among the farthest: one in Nome, Alaska, 3,931 miles from the French Quarter and another in Lihue, Hawaii, 4,279 miles away.

centers. On average, the applicants came from counties where blacks were 28 percent of the population, more than twice the national average.

Baton Rouge, La., appears to be temporary home to 10 percent of evacuees, Houston 6.25 percent. But after the top 18 hubs, applicants are spread like the wind that whipped through their old neighborhoods: none of the other 900-plus metropolitan areas has even 1 percent of the total.

Some 4,000 ZIP codes — among them Pocahontas, Miss.; Promise City, Iowa; and Hope, Mich. - had just one applicant.

In some states a small percentage of tests were performed before water was treated, and some contaminants were subsequently removed or diluted. As a result, some reported levels of contamination may be higher than were present at the tap. Results shown are based on individual samples and may not indicate a violation of the Safe Drinking Water Act, which often occurs only after prolonged tests show concentrations above a legal limit.

Fractions of a Second: An Olympic Musical

At the Olympics, the blink of an eye can be all that separates the gold medalist from the 10th-place finisher. In some events, this is obvious. But in others, with athletes racing one by one, the closeness of the race is harder to perceive. Listen to the differences below.

Alpine skiing

The women's downhill course was extremely tiring, and, because it was more challenging than the men's course, it ended up separating the skiers by much larger margins. This pattern appears in the two speed events: the downhill and the super-G.

Skeleton, Bobsled and Luge

In percentage terms, the men's skeleton had one of the tightest finishes in Vancouver, with only .07 of a second separating the top two finishers across a three-and-a-half-minute run. But the difficult track produced speeds higher than expected, and many sliding events had relatively large gaps between gold and silver.

Budget Puzzle: You Fix the Budget

Today, you're in charge of the nation's finances. Some of your options have more short-term savings and some have more long-term savings. When you have closed the budget gaps for both 2015 and 2030, you are done. Make your own plan, then share it online. X	Cut foreign aid in half At a time when the United States is facing large deficits, some budget analysts argue that the country should significantly reduce the money it spends helping other countries. Others say that foreign aid already represents a smaller share of the budget here than in other rich countries and that it expands American influence.	$17 billion	$17 billion
X	Eliminate earmarks Earmarks are lawmaker-directed spending items, often to finance local projects favored by a member of Congress.	$14 billion	$14 billion
X	Eliminate farm subsidies Many economists argue that farm subsidies distort the workings of the market and largely flow to big agricultural businesses. As the Congressional Budget Office has noted, advocates of reducing the subsidies argue that doing so "could help small farms indirectly, slowing the rate" of consolidation. Supporters argue that the subsidies help preserve the American agriculture industry.	$14 billion	$14 billion
